

Activities and Supplements to Support Joint Health for Older Dogs

Activities and Supplements to Support Joint Health for Older Dogs

Published February 10, 2026

SHARE

- Facebook \(opens in new window\)
- Twitter \(opens in new window\)
- Pinterest \(opens in new window\)
- Download \(opens in new window\)
- <?xml version="1.0" encoding="UTF-8"?> Email \(opens in new window\)
- Print \(opens in same window\)

If your pup is getting a little gray in their muzzle, they might have lost a little pep in their step or started stumbling over obstacles they used to spring over. As our dogs age, their mobility will decrease, just like it does for humans. And as with people, the healthy thing to do for both body and mind is to stay active while remembering that limitations and expectations have shifted.

Shorter activities more often is the key. For example, rather than a long adventure once a week, short walks several times a week will be more beneficial. The same approach goes for any physical activity. Here are a few ideas to help you keep your older pal moving and living their best canine life.

Shop Supplements

Start by Warming Up

Your dog is naturally inclined to socialize with people and animals. If you have a puppy, they'll go through a period of intense curiosity about interacting with others between 7 and 16 weeks of age. Ordinarily, this would be an ideal time to give them plenty of attention and practice socializing.

Of course, training a dog to be antisocial requires the opposite. If you're not paying attention to them, they may just decide that most things in the world are boring and not worth befriending. If you can steer clear of introducing your dog to friendly faces long enough, they should settle into their solitary ways, much like a grumpy human. Easy, huh? You're already well on your way to having an antisocial dog.

Take Regular Walks

No matter their age, just about any dog on the planet will perk up when you grab their leash for a walk. This is a great low-impact exercise for an older dog, especially if you live in a good area for walking. You'll want a route without stairs and extreme elevation changes. Opt for stable, comfortable surfaces with good traction, such as grass and pavement — provided it's not scorching hot or covered in snow and ice.

Along with temperature and weather, be mindful of the pace you set for those high-mileage legs, and take paths closer to home in case your dog gets tired. If your pal stops more often these days to sniff what's happening with the neighborhood dogs, give them an extra minute here and there. Consider adding a stop or two along your walk, perhaps a park or a dog-friendly café.

Shop Supplements

Play Low-key Fetch

Is the fast-paced fetch you and your best friend shared in the past a fond memory you wish you could keep replaying? A more moderate version of the same game can be a lot of fun too! Even if your dog still appears to have the fire in their belly for fetch, the rush of adrenaline that gets them excited for it now may leave them extra pooped-out by tomorrow. To play a more joint-friendly game of fetch, you'll want to minimize force on your pup's joints by decreasing acceleration and deceleration. Don't get your dog wound up to spring after their object of choice — instead, toss it nearer than you used to and try to keep it low to the ground so your dog doesn't jump for it. Play on a surface that provides good footing and keep the sessions short.

Go for a Swim

The buoyancy of water is fantastic for letting your pup enjoy a thorough workout without all that body weight on their bones and joints. Whether it's in a pool or natural body of water, swimming can help maintain muscle tone and mobility. Even if your dog is an accomplished swimmer, always monitor their activity — it's a good idea to put them in a life vest no matter their level of experience.

Try Strength Training

We're talking dog Pilates, dog yoga and other exercises focused on flexibility and muscle tone. These are ideal not just for older dogs, but also for you because you can participate with your pup. Check for classes in your neighborhood or ask your veterinarian for suggestions.

Consider Dog Supplements

Did you know there are supplements formulated to support joint health in adult dogs of all sizes, including GREENIES™ Hip & Joint Supplements? If you're considering supplements for your dog, talk to your veterinarian first. They know your dog and their medical history, so they'll make the best recommendations regarding any supplement regimen.

Regular exercise benefits your dog's joints and keeps their mind working, which helps maintain their overall well-being. Be conscious of your older dog's physical limitations, but don't let age curtail your best friend's quality of life — it just takes a little adjusting to make your dog's favorite activities as safe and fun as ever.

Table of Contents

More Articles Like This

3 Tips For Maintaining Your Cat's Dental Health

Grooming your cat, playing with your cat, and making sure they're eating a balanced diet are all great ways to take care of your feline friend. But given that oral health issues can be common in cats, your cat's dental health should be top of mind, too. Thankfully, there are easy steps you can take to help take care of

READ MORE

4 Tips for Dog Oral Care

Taking care of your dog's oral health is an important part of being a pet parent. Setting up a regular oral healthcare routine will help ensure they have clean teeth, fresh breath and a healthy smile. Here are four tips for helping your dog be at their best when it comes to caring for their mouth. Take an Up-close Look

READ MORE

4 Ways for You and Your Dog to Fall in Love with Fall

This summer, you and your dog probably enjoyed countless hours playing fetch outside and soaking up the sun. While the leaves may be changing color and the air may be cooler, that doesn't mean the end of outdoor fun for the year. Fall is a wonderful time for you and your dog to get out of the house and enjoy the crisp,

READ MORE

Activities and Supplements to Support Joint Health for Older Dogs

If your pup is getting a little gray in their muzzle, they might have lost a little pep in their step or started stumbling over obstacles they used to spring over. As our dogs age, their mobility will decrease, just like it does for humans. And as with people, the healthy thing to do for both body and mind is to stay a

READ MORE

Source URL:

<https://www.greenies.com/blogs/what-were-barking-about-greenies/activities-and-supplements-to-support-joint-health-for-older-dogs>